A favorite island getaway for luxury jetsetters has just reopened its borders to international travelers: St. Barth's. In an announcement made in late June by the island's president, Bruno Magras, "life on the island has returned to normal" — all beaches, restaurants and boutiques are open as usual, without restrictions. Nautical activities are also available. The island is reportedly COVID-19-free.

For travelers who are seeking their own space, Le Barth Villa Rental is welcoming guests. Launched in November last year from the creators of Le Barthélemy Hotel & Spa, Le Barth Villa Rental has over 150 accommodations, ranging from two-bedroom cliffside cottages to ultra-contemporary six-bedroom homes with spacious living areas, gourmet kitchens and lap pools. Each villa comes with 24/7 concierge services, private roundtrip transfers between the airport or dock to the residence, at-home delivery of a rental car, daily delivered continental breakfast, daily housekeeping and a welcome amenities package upon arrival.

On October 28, Le Barthélemy Hotel & Spa will reopen with enhanced measures and amenities that emphasize privacy and personalization.

Advisors can contact Claire Hillau (chillau@lebarth.com), director of sales and marketing, for both the villas and the hotel.
